Council Cuts Dance Deficit

Decision to contribute $150 to help eliminate the debts incurred in the "Blessed Event" dance last Saturday night highlighted the final meeting of the 1950-51 student council last Tuesday.

Joseph Ustynoski, president of the sophomore class, made the following motion: "In recognition of the efforts of the freshmen, sophomore and junior classes to establish an unprecedented major all college social event, I move that student council assist these classes to maintain their financial balance student council assist these classes to maintain their financial balance by directing $150 of its fund to eliminating the debt incurred." The motion was seconded by Barbara Wrisley and passed almost unanimously following discussion.

Claude Thornhill played for the affair, the first in the history of Albright at which a "name" band was featured. Approximately 400 people attended. The deficit approached $325. The three sponsoring classes will make up the remainder after council's contribution. A favorable reaction to the affair was expressed by the committee.

A communication was received from H. Eugene Pierce, superintendent of buildings, urging that council request campus organizations not to advertise their activities by writing in chalk on campus walks and buildings.

Council turned down a request of the Zeta Omega Epsilon fraternity to publicize and hold an all-campus election for a queen for the Zeta dance on Saturday, May 19. It was felt that such an election would detract from the May Day ceremonies and would set a precedent which could lead to an excessive number of queens.

Students Favor Saturday Classes

By a vote of 246 to 145, Albright students decided this week to re-tain Saturday morning classes. The alternative would have been to schedule them for various after-noons, lasting perhaps as late as 5 o'clock.

The freshmen went contrary to the campus action by voting 57-54 in favor of abolishing Saturday classes. The other three classes each voted to retain them. Both day and boarding students wanted to retain these classes, 140 of the former voting in favor and 106 of the latter. Opposing Saturday classes were 75 day students and 70 boarding ones.

With the appointment of members of the news, feature, sports and business staffs early this week, the organization of The Albrightian staff for the remainder of this semester was completed. This staff, which assumed its duties with this issue, will form the nucleus of the 1951-52 organization.

Nancy Neatock and Dorothy Kuettel, sophomores, and Virginia Marick, freshman, were reappointed to the news staff by Phoebe Ann Hunter, news editor. The sports editor, William F. Wahl, announced that Charles R. Kuhns, sophomore, will be assistant sports editor. Raymond C. Schlegel, senior, and Rae Hoopes, freshman, will continue on the sports staff. Wahl added June Dreyer and Jerry Cochiarella, freshmen, as sports writers.

In the daywomen's election Miss Snyder's plurality over Miss Gehris was 13 votes, the total for each being 41 and 28. Receiving an equal number of votes from the class of 52, Miss Snyder and Miss Gehris were running neck and neck until the class of '53 swung the election by a 15 to 7 vote.

Carney won the daymen's election with a total of 88 votes to Howard Peiffer's 69. Carney trailed in the class of '54's voting by a 21 to 15 count, but was given a definite lead of 28 to 15 by the class of '51.

A Journalistic Milestone

Endings and beginnings are always memorable occasions. About ten days ago a group of Albright staff members, several of them seniors, marked the publication of the last issue of the 1950-51 staff by burning the year's copy paper in a traditional ceremony. Today, with the publication of this issue, the 1951-52 staff presents the first results of its efforts.

Several new features are being planned by the new editors. One of these, the "Current Tides" column, makes its first appearance on this page today. In it trends in local, national and interna-tional affairs will be analyzed. Other columns and features will come into being next fall.

Various changes will be made in the coverage of campus news and in the overall appearance of the paper. More pictures will appear. We shall constantly strive to present the news at it breaks, before everyone finds out about it in other ways. The comments of our readers will always be appreciated. We encourage them to write letters to the editor on any subject whatever. These letters will receive careful attention and will in most cases be published.

In preparation for the publication of this and subsequent issues, The Albrightian staff was com-pletely reorganized. Highlighting this reorganization was the creation of an editorial staff. In addition, staff meetings have been scheduled for every Friday afternoon.

One thought has been uppermost in our minds in planning these new features and revised organization. That is to make The Albrightian better able to serve Albright College. Our aim shall always be to present the truth to the best of our ability and to stand for those things which will benefit the students and the college as a whole.

Election Post - Mortems

At least two conclusions may be drawn from the results of this week's all-college election. One of these is that the leadership of the major student organizations will be in capable hands again next year. The other is that the long-standing gripes about Saturday classes should cease with the defeat of the proposal to abolish them.

There were, of course, the usual number of students who just couldn't bother to vote. This is naturally to be regretted, although actually they themselves were the only ones who suffered because of their neglect.

The Albrightian salutes the winners in the allcollege election. We hope that their year of service may be a memorable one.

Register for Y Retreat

It isn't every weekend that Albright students and faculty members will have the chance which will be theirs on April 28 and 29, when they can hear Dr. John Oliver Nelson at the spring Y retreat at Blue Mountain. Director of field work and professor of practical theology at Yale University, Doctor Nelson has captured many audiences with his keen insights, challenging messages and vital personality.

Unless we want to bury ourselves in the sands of our own complacent thinking, we won't forget to register for the spring Y retreat.

Current Tides—Military vs. Civil Authority

By RUSSELL F. WEIGLEY

Editor's Note: With this column on military vs. civil authority, The Albrightian inaugurates a new weekly feature. In subsequent weeks various local, national and international trends will be

On Wednesday, April 4 the Senate by a vote of 67 to 21 passed a resolution approving the President's plan to send four additional American divisions to bolster the defenses of western Europe. To the administration, passage of this resolution brought a sigh of relief; weeks of seemingly endless debate on the matter had thrown our European defense planning seriously behind schedule. A second provision of the resolution, however, held no comfort for the White House; "without further congressional authority," said the Senate, no troops beyond the authorized four divisions should cross the Atlantic. Here was a direct challenge to the President's contention that as commanderin-chief of the armed forces he can, under the Constitution, send troops wherever he wants without consulting the Congress.

send troops wherever he wants without consulting the Congress.

History gives us many examples of Presidents doing just that; but none of the more than a hundred instances when American soldiers have gone abroad on executive orders alone, not even sending the marines to fight in Nicaragua or Haiti, really sets a precedent for a decision as far-reaching as the commitment of troops to the defense of western Europe. Moreover, history further gives us instances of specific cases in which the Congress prohibited the shipment of troops overseas without its express approval. The Neutrality Acts of 1935, 1937, and 1939 contained such provisions, as did the act of December, 1945 by which the President's power to place American contingents at the disposal of the UN was limited.

Thus the constitutional question is a doubtful one; and involved in the problem of the President's authority to use the armed forces as he will, looming constantly in the background of the so-called Great Debate on American military policy, is the whole tangled question of where the dividing line between military and civil authority in a democracy should lie. Throughout our history this question has perplexed us; no real answer has ever been found; and should we take a false step in attempting to solve the dilemma, the result is likely to be the downfall of our democracy itself.

Where do basically military decisions end and where does civil responsibility for the general framing of our military and foreign policy begin? Obviously a line, albeit a hazy line, must be drawn somewhere. That the ultimate responsibility for American policy must rest with the President and then with the Congress no one denies, though some of our generals have had an exasperating habit of forgetting the principle when it suited them to do so. On the other hand, there is an area where decisions must be based primarily on specialized military knowledge; while demanding general civil supervision, we must presume that our generals are competent to make such decisions. The results when the civil government encroached on the military sphere in the past often approached disaster. Effective prosecution of the Civil War, for example, was constantly hampered by the activities of the Congressional Committee on the Conduct of the War, a group dominated by Radical Republicans which time and again pulled Federal commanders away from their proper places in the field to investigate their activities, ostensibly to keep the army on its toes but more often to smirch the reputations of those generals whose politics failed to please the committee—McClellan, Fitz-John Porter, and Democrats in general—and to boost the stock of generals who were sufficiently fire-eating in their views on slavery—Fremont, Pope, Burnside, and other choice incompetents.

On several occasions in the past few months influential Congressmen and Senators have come dangerously close their views on slavery—Fremont, Pope, Burnside, and other choice incompetents.

On several occasions in the past few months influential Congressmen and Senators have come dangerously close to advocating Congressional decision in areas of military competence. The Congress, of course, must determine the balance between land, set and air forces in our defense establishment; but the testimony of military experts on the proper composition of our forces can be ignored only in most unusual circumstances. Nonetheless, important Congressional leaders, speaking without military experience or training, have urged that we coverlook the advice of men like Secretary Marshall and General Bradley in planning our rearmament, that we cut our army to the bone to find "bargain counter security" in technically unqualed sea and air forces. Maintenance of democracy demands that the civil government jealously guard its supremacy over the military; but that supremacy must not be exercised simply to prove it exists, or in order to gain partisan advantage. In an hour of crisis the judgment of the military must be viewed critically but with respect. The delicate balance between civil and military powers must not be tipped in either direction.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

I feel that Student Council deserves a special bouquet for taking its stand against the State Legislative proposal which would require all State employees to take a loyalty oath. It is to be hoped that professors throughout the State have also realized the lesson to be learned by the action against academic freedom by the State of California and take their stand accordingly.

Besides exemplifying what can be achieved on the practical level by local political organs, Student Council has revitalized the fight for academic freedom. By this action, Student Council has shown itself to believe in Veritas et Justitia, the motto emblazoned in the col-

A Bouquet Is in Order

The "Blessed Event" dance, which featured Claude Thornhill and his orchestra, was one of the finest social events sponsored by Albright College. More than 400 students, alumni, and friends attended the gala occasion last Saturday night at the Rajah Ballroom. It was the first time in the history of Albright College that a "name" band was featured.

To pen up the westing

To pep up the meeting, as if it really needed pepping up, Jay Schraier, Margie Sternberg, Lyn Russo, and Phoebe Hunter were on hand to revive the flapper age. Where did you ever pick up that Charleston beat, Jay?

We heard there was a little accident Saturday evening. Somebody pushed something they shouldn't have this is why some students complained of sticking to the floor. With a quick floor wash-up and a change of shirts, we leave this incident.

Why is it that someone always gets jackets and coats confused at dances? We heard someone had either a pair of suddenly elongated arms or else someone else's coat. However, we think the latter sounds more likely. Well, the story goes something like this. A certain boy was seen leaving the dance with a mid-sleeve dinner jacket.

To all the committee members who worked so hard on cance—a bouquet. They really did their best to make so "Blessed Event" blessed. We know many of us will looking forward to as much or more success in fure affairs.

Pat Poore, this week's dandy lion, comes to us from Carlisle. Not that she's homesick but Pat's Chevy makes a trip home quite frequently. Possibly, this is because Carlisle is a college town and there could be some attraction.

As a member of The Albrightian staff for the past four years, Pat has given an untold amount of time to this organization and as editor-in-chief this year, she spent every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evening hard at work in the "dugout" under the Ad Building to meet the deadlines and keep her staff on the ball. Despite this amount of time put toward a good cause, she was still able to keep her academic record as one of the two senior boarding women to have unlimited twelves. (She usually takes them too!) When asked about having more free time to herself now that her Albrightian duties are completed, her eyes twinkled, and she only smiled coyly. Actually, Pat, you deserve to be congratulated for the fine job which you have done on The Albrightian this year.

by preventing practice drills, the Lions showed good form while romping over the Dickinson nine. Hook Martone, braving snappy weather, was on the mound and Billy Krohto behind the plate for the Cats. Martone got himself in a jam several times throughout the game but came out of it in fine fashion. He struck out twelve men and turned in a magnificent performance of pitching while allowing only three hits. In the limelight was Lefty Leitham, who handled the bat like a king while getting three hits in five trips to the plate to lead the Lion tossers. Jay Sherleck, who is a little man but has plenty of power, slammed the ball into deep right field for a triple which helped the cause of the Lions.

Rams, Phantoms, Pirates, Dutchmen Follow on Coach Gulian's Schedule

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the Albright Lions will play host to Gettysburg on the 15th and Bern Street field. The Bullets, coached by Ira Plank, brother of the immortal Eddie Plank, and veteran of 39 years at the helm, brings his team here with two games under their belt. The Cats will be out to avenge a 4-1 setback handed to them last year at Gettysburg. After a shaky first inning in this game, Paul Muller gave up only two hits, four runs, and three walks. Kenny Houtz allowed the Lions a mere four hits but isn't around this year

Swifty Young, who has everything a coach could ask for, heads the mound staff. Young's trouble in the past has been control but he has overcome this during the past ner, witnessed by the fact that the Phillies offered him quite a nice sum to sign with their organization.
